LUXEMBOURG, the Metropolis of the Dutchy, bearing the same Name, is finely seated, commodious, of a great Compass, and very strong: being also indifferently full of Houses. The principal Church is Dedicated to St. Nicholas. There is besides a very fair Convent, which as it is said, the Inscriptions also upon the Walls thereof testifying as much, was one of the first of St. Francis's Order, built in his life time. This Town has undergone many Misfortunes, having upon all occasions of War, served for the Butt, whereat Fortune discharged her Arrows. It was in the year 1542. taken and Plunder'd by the French, under the Command of the Duke of Orleans, Son to the great King Francis the 1*st*. In the Year 1543. it was again taken and Plundered by the French, and was Finally on the fourth of June in this present Year 1684. brought under the Dominion of the French.

A Diary of The Siege of LUXEMBOURG by the French Kings Forces, under the Command of the Mareſchal de Crequi: Containing a full Account of all that paſſed in the Siege and Surrendry of the Town of LUXEMBOURG.

LUXEMBOURG, the Metropolis of the Dutchy, bearing the ſame Name, is finely ſeated, commodious, of a great compaſs, and very ſtrong: being alſo indifferently full of Houſes. The principal Church is Dedicated to St. Nicholas. There is beſides a very fair Convent, which as it is ſaid, the Inſcriptions alſo upon the Walls thereof teſtifying as much, was one of the firſt of St. Frantis's Order, built in his life time. This Town has undergone many Misfortunes, having upon all occaſions of War, ſerved for the Butt, whereat Fortune diſcharged her Arrows. It was in the year 1542. taken and Plunder'd by the French, under the Command of the Duke of Orleans, Son to the great King Francis the 1*ſt*. In the Year 1543. it was again taken and Plundered by the French, and was Finally on the fourth of June in this preſent Year 1684. brought under the Dominion of the French.

The Town of Luxembourg is built upon a Rock, waſhed almoſt on every ſide by a little River, called Alſiette, which comes from the South, and having almoſt encompaſſed that place, continues its courſe towards the North. The part of the Rock environed by the River is exceeding ſteep, and needs no other Defence but its natural Scituation: ſo that they have ſcarce built any Fortifications on thoſe ſides. The ſide not environed by the River, which looks towards the Weſt, is Fortified with four Baſtions cut into the Rock, as is alſo the Ditch, which is very deep. There are before theſe Baſtions, Countergards, Half-Moons and Ravelins cut into the Rock, as are alſo the Ditches that cover them. Before all theſe Works there are two open ways with their Cauſeys; the firſt whereof is defended by four Redouts of Stone in the Angles, bearing out from the Counterſcarp. This ſide which is not invironed by the River, was the only place whereby the Town could be aſſaulted, all the reſt being found too ſteep; and of this ſide the part attacked was the new Gate, which is on the North, near the place where the River begins to turn away from the Town.

The French Army commanded by the Mareſchal de Crequi inveſted the Place April the 28*th*.

1684. New-ſtyle. Some days were ſpent in preparitives for the Siege, and taking their Quarters.

The Head Quarters were ſetled from the height of Bambuche to the Village of Merle; and there were quartered eight Squadrons and Batallions, with four Companies of Cannoniers. The Quarters of the Count du Pleſſis, the Marqueſs de Genlis, and the Sieur de Joyeuſe Lieutenant Generals were thus ordered, the firſt from Linſing to the Hill of the Abby of Bonnevoye with Seven Squadrons, and Eleven Batallions; the ſecond from the ſame Hill to the ſtream which goes up towards the Village of Hant, with five Batallions; the third from the River of Alſiette, as you go back again up to Hant, as far as the Village of Homeldange, and there were Poſted eight Squadrons, and ſix Batallions. There were alſo quartered in the bottom of Homeldange two Squadrons of Dragoons of the Baron de Hasfeld, with two Batallions of Fugeliers, and the Company of Miners and Gunners.

May the 8*th*. the Mareſchal de Crequi gave Orders to open their Trenches.

The Count du Pleſſys, Lieutenant General for the day, the Count de Broglio, Mareſchal de Camp, and the Duke de la Ferte, Brigadier of Foot, Poſted themſelves between five and ſix in the Evening on

on the Hills of our Lady of Conſolation, with two Batallions of Campaign, which had at their Head the Baily Colbert, Colonel of that Regiment, one Batallion of Enguien, and one of la Ferte. The two firſt Batallions march'd in a Bottom behind the Chappel, and two others on their Left-hand, upon the Reverſe of theſe Hills. The Count de Talart, Brigadier of Horſe, came upon the ſame Hills with the Horſe under his Command, which were four Hundred, to Guard the Trenches, having before him two Hundred Foot to make uſe of, in caſe the Beſieged ſhould make any Sally. At Nine in the Evening they opened about half a Muſket-ſhot from the Counterſcarp, a Trench, parallel to the attack'd ſide of the place, about five Hundred Toiſes long, and this work was carried on two ſeveral ways, the one by the Chappel on the Left-hand of the Head Quarters; and the other on the ſide of Paſſendal, on the other ſide of the oppoſite place. The Pioneers of the Attack of Champaign, carried on the work from the Right to the Left, within fifty or ſixty Toiſes of the Chappel of Miracles, which is about a Piſtol-ſhot from the Counterſcarp; and thoſe of the Attack of la Ferte and Enguien carried on the work from the Left to the Right: and theſe works met about the Mid-way. The Sieur de Vauban, Mareſchal of the Kings Camps and Armies, who had been at Noon to view the Counterscarp, and who had the inspection over these two Attacks, caused to be traced this Night two Batteries, with Lines of Communication to the Trench, upon a rising Ground, about thirty or forty Toises on this side the Chappel, in respect of the Besiegers. The Marquess de Renti, Mareschal de Camp, made a false Attach upon the height of the Fauxbourg of Gromp, or of the Basse-Ville, with a Batallion of Conde; The Marquess de Crenan made another by the bottom of the Abby of Bonnevoy with five Hundred detached men: and at the same time there was a Battery traced upon the Hill of Passendal, where there was a Batallion of Orleans, with a Detachment of two Hundred Men. The Prince de Conti, and the Prince de la Roche, Sur Yon his Brother, were present at the opening of the Trenches, and passed the Night there. The Besieged for above five hours made not one Shot, but about two in the Morning they began to Fire very briskly at us with their Muskets. There was not however above eight or nine of our Men Killed and Wounded, which were of the Regiment of Champagne. About Break of Day they played also smartly upon us with their Cannon, which yet had not any considerable Effect. Some

Horse.

Horſe Sa'lied out of the Town about four or five in the Morning, but haſtily Retreated at the firſt Firing of the Detachments, which were commanded to ſhelter the Laborers. They perſiſted all that day to play upon us with their Cannon, but ſtill without much ſucceſs. On our ſide they continued to work on the Batteries.

The 9th. there was a Man ſtopt, who endeavoured to get into Luxembourg: and there was found about him a Paſsport from the Marqueſs de Grana, Dated Auguſt the 28*th*, with Bills of Exchange for five and thirty Thouſand Florins, payable in Luxembourg, and many Letters in Ciphers. We knew alſo by the ſame way, that there were ſeveral Officers who deſigned to get into the Town, to joyn with their Regiments there.

In the Evening the Marqueſs de Genlis, Lieutenant General for the day, and the Sieur de Joſſeaux, Brigadier of Foot, relieved the Count du Pleſſis, and the Duke de la Ferte, who had the Right hand of the great Attach: and the Sieur d Erlac, Mareſchal de Camp relieved the Count de Broglio, who had the Left. Two Batallions of Navarre relieved on the Right the two of Campagne, and the Batallions of Vaubecourt, and Conti, at the head of which was the Prince de Conti, accompanied by the Prince de la Roche, Sur-Yon in the quality of a Volunteer, relieved on the left, that of Enguien, and that of la Ferte. The Beſieged (at the time we went to releive the Trenches) ſet Fire to the Houſes of a part of the Fauxbourg of Paſſendal: they quitted alſo a Mill, which was but fifty paces from it, having prepared a Mine to blow it up, (in the belief they had, that our men would ſeize thereon:) but we went not thither, and the Mine ſprang without the ſucceſs they expected. During the night we carried on a ſecond Trench, parallell to the firſt of the great Attack, within ſixty Toiſes of the covered Fore-way of the Place: and the Communications were made without any of the workmens being Kill'd or wounded, altho' the Enemy Fired Stifly upon them with their Muſkets. The Sieur de Montmeillant, Captain in the Royal Regiment, and the Sieur de Favigny, Captain and Ayde Major of Piemont, and four or five Lieutenants were ſlightly wounded. We continued alſo to work diligently on the Batteries raiſed on the Hills of our Lady of Conſolation. The Beſieged about break of day played briskly with their Cannon; but we had not above ſix or ſeven Soldiers ſlain.

The 10th. Two of our Batteries of ſeven pieces of Cannon each, began to play about eight in the Morning with great ſucceſs; and a Battery of Nine Mortar-pieces, which had been put n order by the Sieur de Vigny, began about Noon o caſt its Bombs againſt a Platform of the Baſtion on the Right; and we diſmounted three Pieces of a Battery of four Pieces, which the Beſieged had erected there, and from whence they Fired very vigorouſly. The ſame day a Battery of five Pieces, which was upon the Hill of Bonnevoye, began alſo to Play. We raiſed one of Two Pieces upon the Riſing Ground, which looks into the Fauxbourg of Gromp, and we continued to work upon one of Fifteen on the Hill of Paſſendal; which was finiſhed with the loſs only of Nine Soldiers killed, and ſeven or eight wounded, with three or four Officers.

In the Evening the Sieur de Joyeuſe, Lieutenant General for the day, the Marqueſs de Renti, Mareſchal de Camp, and the Sieur de Refuge, Brigadier of Foot, relieved the Marqueſs de Genlis, the Sieur d' Erlac, and the Sieur de Joſſeaux, with the two Batallions of Piemont; the firſt Batallion of Auvergne, and the firſt Batallion of the Royal Rouſſillon, which entred the Trenches in the place of the two Batallions of Navarre, and the two of Vaubecoutt and Conti. In the night there was carried on a third Trench, parallel to the ſecond, about Thirty Paces from the firſt covered way, which comprehended all the Out-works of the Attack. The Beſieged burnt this Night the other part of the Fauxbourg of Paſſendal; and Fired alſo at us briskly with their Muskets.

All the following day they played upon us with their Cannon; and yet kill'd us but about Seven or Eight Men, and wounded Ten or Twelve. The ſame day, viz. the 11th. the Beſiegers finiſhed their Battery of Fifteen Pieces, and with their Cannon and Bombs entirely ruined the Platforms and Defences of the Baſtion on the Right.

In the Evening the Count de St. Geran, Lieutenant General, and the Marqueſs de Neſle, Brigadier of Foot, relieved the Sieur de Joyeuſe, and the Sieur de Refuge, who were on the right hand of the great Attack; and the Chevalier de Tilladet, Mareſchal de Camp, Relieved the Marqueſs de Renti, who was on the Left. The Trenches were mounted on the Right by two Batallions of Normandy, who took the Poſt of the two Batallions of Piemont; and the Batallions of Lionnois and Turenne relieved on the Left the Batallions of Auvergne and the Royal. The Trench, which comprehended all the Outworks of the Place, was carried on within Twenty Paces of the firſt open way. The Sieur de Vigny made a Battery an Hundred and fifty Paces to the Left, from the firſt he had made, to ruine with Bombs the Platform and Batteries which were upon the Baſtion on the Left. The Lieutenant of the Granadiers of Normandy, a Sub-Lieutenant of Enguien, and Nine Soldiers were ſlain, and ſix or ſeven wounded.

The Morrow being the 12th. the other Batteries were finiſhed, and Thirty eight Pieces of Cannon, and fifteen Mortar-Pieces began that day to play continually. The ſame day about Noon, a Cannon-Bullet of the Beſiegeds ſet on Fire Thirty Bombs of the Beſiegers, which were on the Sieur de Vigny's firſt Battery: Seven Gunners and two Soldiers were kil'd, and there were ſix grievouſly wounded. The Sieur de Caillemote, ſecond Son of the Marqueſs de Ruvigny, was wounded in the Throat with a Musket-ſhot.

In the Evening the Marqueſs de Lambert, Lieutenant General, the Sieur de Rubantel, and the Marqueſs de Crenan, Relieved the General Officers which were in the Trenches; two Batallions of the Marine Relieved the Poſt on the Right-hand; and two Batallions of the Queens Relieved the Poſt on the Left. During the Night the Beſiegers lodged themſelves on the Cauſey of the covered way; and there was a Communication made from one Lodgment to the other. The Work was carried on at the Attack of Bonnevoye, within 30 Paces of the Ditch, on the ſide of the Gate of Thionville, where a Battery of 5 Pieces was raiſed. At the ſame time we Advanced 5 of the great Battery of Paffendal. for to Batter on the reverſe the Baſtion and Out-works of the great Attack on the Left, and to beat down the Gate of Paffendal. There was opened at the Attack of Gromp, within 20 Paces of the Ditch, a Trench, parallel to the Front, which has upon one and the ſame Line 4 Towers, and which faces the Hill of Gromp: we brought down the Battery which was upon this Hill, with a deſign to beat in pieces the Gate of this Fauxbourg, and ſo to be able to diſmount 2 Pieces which were on a Platform within 100 Paces on the Right hand of this Gate, and which much incommoded the Beſiegers: We ſeized on a Church within half a Musket-ſhot of the place, ſcituated upon a riſing Ground between Gromp and Paffendal, the Enemy not making any reſiſtance. Fifty men were left there to keep it. There was this Night a Serjeant kil'd, with about Ten Soldiers, and Twenty wounded.

The 13th in the Morning a Soldier of the place came into the Camp; he told us, that the Prince de Chimay had been obliged to commit the defence of the Out-works to the Townſmen, and to draw the Soldiers into the Town for fear of their running away. About Noon the beſieged Sprang two little Mines under a Lodgment we had made on the right hand hand, upon the Cauſey of the firſt covered way; there were Three Soldiers ſlain, and about Fifteen wounded.

In the Evening the Count du Pleſſis, Lieutenant General, the Sieur de Gournay, Mareſchal de Camp, and the Sieur de Maumont, Brigadier of Foot, relieved the General Officers in the Trenches: A Batallion of Bourbonnois, one of Humieres, one of the Crown, and one of Languedoc Relieved thoſe which were at the great Attack. The Marqueſs de Humieres, only Son to the Mareſchal de Humieres, was ſlain by a Musket-ſhot which hit him in the Head. About Midnight 4 Parties of Granadiers, of 10 Men each, had order to enter at the ſame time by 4 ſeveral places into the firſt covered way, to ſettle themſelves therein if they found not too great reſiſtance; and to ſeize on a Redout, called the Redout of St. Mary, which is between the two covered ways: But after they had born a violent Charge of Muskets, Granadoes and Fireworks, they were forced to Retreat, becauſe this Redout was reveſted in the ſame manner as the Ditch, wherein there was a Caponiere fill'd with Musketeers, and becauſe there was no getting into it but by a Gallery under Ground, the end whereof joyned to the covered way neareſt the place.

Thus were we obliged to proceed along by digging as far as the Palizadoes, whence we carried on a Lodgment in the covered way, which the Beſiegers extended on the Right and Left of the bottom of the Ditch of the Redoubt; and the Miners, to overthrow it, wrought under the Ditch. At the Attack on the Left, our Men lodged themſelves on the Cauſey of the covered way, whence was a Communication made to the Lodgement on the Right. A Lieutenant of the Royal Regiment was kill'd, with 3 Serjeants, 9 or 10 Soldiers, and 5 Canoniers; and a Captain with about 20 Soldiers wounded.

In the Evening the Poſts of the Trenches were Relieved by the Marqueſs de Genlis, Lieutenant General; the Marqueſs d' Uxelles, Mareſchal de Camp, and the Duke de la Ferte, Brigadier of Foot, with 2 Batallions of Champagne, that of la Ferte, and and one of Orleans. There was finiſhed on the right hand of the great Attack, the Lodgment in the covered way, upon the brink of the Ditch of the Redoubt, where the Miners could not eaſily go on becauſe of the Rock they there met with; We brought on 2 Pieces of Cannon endeavouring to break the Communication of the Redoubt with the ſecond covered way. On the Left hand of the Attack was ſent forth a Detachment of Granadiers of la Ferte, to ſee if the Enemies had quitted the firſt covered way on that ſide. They could not come to know it, becauſe the Enemies were there couched on their Bellies, and at the appearance of our Men roſe, and obliged them to retire: Ten of the Granadiers were ſlain, and 2 mortally wounded; the Captain had his Arm broken, and the Sub-Lieutenant was wounded: the Marqueſs de Genils's Ayde de Camp received a mortal wound; and two Officers of Orleans were ſlightly wounded.

The 15th. Three Fugitives from the Place related, That the Governor of the Town, the Prince de Chimay, was that Night wouuded in the Leg, and that the Major was killed. That day we Advanced two Batteries, each of two Pieces of Cannon, for to batter a Redoubt, which is near the two covered ways on the Left; and in the mean time we played the moſt advantagiouſly we could from the Batteries that were in condition, for to ruine the Out-works and Defences of the Baſtion on the ſame ſide: we ſeized alſo two Redouts on the backſide of Paſſendal which the Cannon of the Beſiegers had very much damnaged.

In the Evening the Guard of the Trenches was Relieved by the Sieur de Joyeuſe, the Count de Broglia, and the Sieur de Joſſeaux, with the 2 Batallions of Navarre, that of Vaubecourt and that of Conti, in the Head whereof was the Prince de Conti: The Marqueſs de la Valette had at the ſame time his Thigh broken by a Cannon ſhot from one of our Batteries which had paſſed over the Town. In the night the Beſiegers made themſelves Maſters of a third Redoubt on the backſide of Paſſendal. We carried on the Lodgment which was upon the Cauſey of the firſt covered way, near 15 Toiſes to the right and left; and in the midſt of this Advance were raiſed two Platforms, for to look backwards into the covered way: The Beſieged Fired fiercely all the night, but with little ſucceſs. About 5 in the Morning they quitted the covered way, and Sprang a Mine, which they believed muſt be under our Lodgments; but it had not any effect. The Beſiegers took the advantage of an enforcement, which this Mine had made near the Palizadoes, and made uſe of it to Lodge themſelves there: but this deſign would not eaſily have ſucceeded, had not the Prince de Conti by his Preſence and Bounty encouraged the Soldiers, whom the fear of a ſecond Mine hindred from working. An Ingenier and 4 Soldiers were ſlain on this occaſion, and a Capt. of Navarre, one of Burgundy, the Sub-Lieutenant of the Granadiers of Conti, and 9 or 10 Soldiers were wounded. We extended the Lodgement which was on the brink of the Ditch of the Redoubt.

The 16*th* the Beſieged battered with much ſucceſs the Redout which was on there left, between the two covered ways: and a Mine, which had been made to open the Ditch of that Redout on the Right, had all the effect they deſired. The Sieur de Court, Major of Conti, was Kill'd in coming down from the Trenches. We have ſince the 16*th* ruined, with the great Battery of Paſſendal, a Traverſe of ſtone about 6 Toiſes long, which was at the point of an Half Moon, that covers the Baſtion on the left, to hinder us from looking betwten the oppoſite Hills into the covered way of the place, we likewiſe ruined with the ſame Battery, two Towers which covered the Gate of the Tower on that ſide.

According to the laſt News, come from the Siege, they continued to batter many little works, full of earth, and in confuſion againſt this Gate, the Baſtion, and the Three Redoubts, whereof ours had made themſelves Maſters, and which flank'd the Reverſe of the Hills. The Beſiegers were reſolved to ſet

after-

afterward the Miner to the Baſtion, and they hop'd to ſucceed eaſily therein, becauſe there was no Ditch on that ſide.

May the 16*th* in the Evening the Count de St. Geran, Lieutenant General for the day, and Sieur de Refuge, Brigadier of Foot, mounted the Trenches on the Right, and the Sieur d'Erlac, Mareſchal de Camp mounted on the Left. Two Batallions of Piemont relieved thoſe of Navarre, and two Batallions of Auvergne, and the Royal, relieved thoſe of Vaubecourt and Conti.

We carried on during the Night, to the Mine, the Trench which is of the brink of the Ditch of the Redout on the Right, advancing towards the ſecond covered way: and we continued to batter a Breach in the Redout. On the Left we extended in the firſt covered way to the Lodgment which had been made there, and we wrought for the Communication of the three Redouts, which are on the backſide of Paſſendal: the Enemy Fired vigouroufly this night, and there were nine or ten Soldiers kill'd, and about twenty Wounded. The ſame Night we extended at the Attack of Grondt the Lodgment all along the Ditch, and brought thither a Battery of 3 Pieces. There was not any new work made on the ſide of the Attack of Bonnevoy.

In the Evening of the 17*th* the Marqueſs de Lambert Lieutenant General, and the Marqueſs de Crenan, Brigadier of Foot, relieved the Guard of the Trenches on the Right with a Batallion of Normandy, and that of Soiſſons; and the Marquels de Renti, Mareſchal de Camp, relieved it on the Left with a Batallion of Lyonnois, and that of Turenne.

We continued on the Right to Batter the Redout; and to work through the Mine, with a deſign to incloſe it. We perfected on the Left the Lodgments and Communications which had been made there; and we diſcharged abundance of Cannon and Bombs, to finiſh the ruining the Defences of the attaked ſide, and the Palizadoes which remain'd on the ſecond covered way. The Beſieged alſo Fired fierceiy during the Night, and kill'd us about twenty Soldiers, and wounded five and twenty, or thirty, with four or five Officers.

The

The 18*th.* in the Evening, the Count du Pleſſis, Lieutenant General for the Day and the Marqueſs de Neſle, Brigadier of Foot, relieved the Poſts on the right with two Batallions of the Marine, and the Chevalier de Tilladet, Mareſchal de Camp, relieved the Poſts on the left with two Batallions of the Queens.

The Redouts of this Attack are of very good ſtone, and every where Canon-proof. They have three ſtories of Battlements, with a reveſted Ditch, ſixteen Foot broad, and fourteen deep, in the Reveſtment whereof are Caponieres, which command round about. Theſe Redouts have communication with the Ditch of the Place, and the covered Way, by three Galleries under ground, built one upon another, of ſix Foot in heighth, and four in breadth.

The Count du Pleſſis viſited all the Poſts of the Trenches. He ſent to view the Breach, which our Canon had made in the higheſt ſtory of the Redouts on the right, and to which the Breaches of the Mines made an aſcent. We found no body there: and the Count du Pleſſis ſent thither onely ſix Granadiers and a Serjeant, for fear there might be Mines. They

ſaw through the Holes of the Arches, that the Enemies kept yet the lower ſtory, and they caſt Granadoes at them, but they were not ſufficient to drive them away. The Count du Pleſſis cauſed Bombs to be thrown at them, which yet diſſipated them not, till they had had their effect, and he ſent to charge them with ſword in hand.

At the ſame time, we carried on the Mine-work to the Galleries of Communication from the Redout to the Ditch, and the covered Way of the Place, and we lodged our ſelves by this Mining in the midſt of the ſecond Cauſey. The Enemies, percieving the Beſiegers ready to pierce the Communication, were afraid to be cut off without being ſuccoured, and retired with ſo much precipitation through the middle Gallery into their Ditch, that they left many Muskets, and ſome Hats in the Redout.

We rolled afterwards two great Casks, full of Fagots into the ſecond Gallery, notwithſtanding the Beſieged fired furiouſly upon us from the Gate: and after two Hours fight under ground, we ſet up a Traverſe, to hinder their Return to the Redout.

The Enemy did alſo the ſame on their ſide,

to ſtop the progreſs of our Workmen. They had prepared four Mines at the four Corners of the Redout: but they could not ſet them on fire becauſe of the Water, which was in the loweſt Gallery.

We continued to batter a Breach in the Redout on the left, to make a Mine to open the Ditch, and to incloſe this Redout by Mining, as we had that on the right. We made a Lodgment on the back-ſide of Paffendal, the length of the Traverſe, and the Face of the Half-Moon, within four paces whereof the Works were advanced. But we were conſtrained to quit it by the abundance of Bombs, Granadoes and Fireworks, which the Beſieged caſt from the Half-Moon, and the covered Way. The Communication of the two Attacks was made during the Night, notwithſtanding thirty Toiſes of the Rock, which were between the two Lodgments.

The ſame day, being the 19*th.* four Miners were ſet to the Attack of Grondt from the Gate unto the neareſt Tower: and they wrought with ſo much diligence, that in the Evening they began to charge the Mines. A Captain of the Queens, and two or three inferior Officers were wounded: five or ſix Soldiers were ſlain, and about twenty wounded.

The 19*th.* in the Evening, the Marqueſs de Genlis, Lieutenant General, and the Marqueſs de Crenan, Brigadier of Foot, mounted the Trenches on the right hand with the Batallions of Bourbonnois and Humieres, and the Sieur de Rubantel, Mareſchal de Camp, mounted on the left with the Batallions of the Crown and Vermandois.

In the Night we extended on the right the Lodgment, which was upon the Communication of the Redout with the ſecond covered Way, above five and thirty Toiſes to the right, and as much to the left: and this Logdment was in ſome places within twelve paces of the Palizadoes. We perfected on the left the Lodgment which was made to incloſe the Redout.

We had proceeded very ſlowly in battering it, becauſe we judged it not fit to finiſh the making a Breach therein, before the Miner, who was ſet to the exteriour Wall of the Ditch, and who had required two Days to open it, becauſe of the Rock he found there, was nearer finiſhing his Work. There was made alſo a Place of Arms, capable to contain a thouſand or twelve hundred men in the Trench, Trench, which communicates with the two Lodgments.

We re-eſtabliſhed with great Gabions along the Traverſe, as far as the Point of the Countergard, the Lodgment we had there the Night before, and which we had quitted in the Day. The Beſieged caſt ſtore of Bombs and Granadoes to hinder us from re-eſtabliſhing it. The Count de Gaſſe, Colonel of the Vermandois Regiment, who ſupported the Head of the Work on the left, had there twenty Granadieres kill'd or wounded. The Enemy caſt an extraordinary Number of Granadoes, when we were got within an Halbards length of the Angle of the ſecond Counterſcarp.

The 20*th.* in the morning they ſprang a Mine, which they had under the two Angles. That on the right overthrew twenty Gabions without hurting above two Soldiers, and the Damage was repaired in two hours by the Care of the Sieur Lapara Ingenier. The Mine on the left had not any conſiderable effect. The Beſiegers alſo at ſeven in the morning ſprang the Mine of Groxdi: and it made a Breach for ſix men to enter a breaſt. The Granadiers of Languedoc and Burgundy aſcended ded first, with so much vigour, that they drove away fifty Soldiers, which defended it, and made ten paces beyond the Breach a Lodgment forty Toises long, notwithstanding they were fiercely shot at from the Rampart, and Ravelin of Grondt. The Captain of the Granadiers of Burgundy, and he of the Granadiers of Languedoc two inferior Officers, and thirty Soldiers were wounded: and there were nine or ten Soldiers slain.

About three in the Afternoon four Soldiers of the Besieged came into the Camp: and they averred, that the Besiegers had kill'd or wounded them since the Siege above three hundred Men: that Captain Gregory, a famous Officer amongst them for commanding of Parties, was kill'd: and not the Major of the Town, as the report went: that the Prince de Chimay made the Women and Children work upon the Retirades, and that he was still resolved to make a vigorous Defence.

The 20*th*. in the Evening the Sieur de Joyeuse, Lieutenant General, and the Marquess de Nesle, Brigadier of Foot, mounted the Trenches on the right with two Batallions of Champagne: and the Marquess de Renti, Mareschal de Camp, mounted on the left with a Batallion of la Ferte, and one of Orleans. We

We extended, during the Night, a great Line, which made the Place of Arms, from one Redout to the other; and we put it into condition to contain above three thouſand Men. On the left the Lodgment, which was along the Traverſe, was continued to the middle of the Face of the Countergard, notwithſtanding the Enemies fired all Night briskly upon us with Muskets, Bombs and Granadoes.

We began alſo a Platform on the right to look backwards into the covered Way of the Place, and there were ſeven or eight Soldiers kill'd, and about thirty wounded, with two Officers. The Count de Tonnerre, Colonel of the Regiment of Orleans, was wounded in the Head.

The 21*ſt.* at three in the Afternoon the Beſieged quitted the Redout on the left hand, ſeeing that it was entirely incloſed by the Works of the Beſiegers, and ſeeing alſo the great Breach their Canon had made therein. They retired into the Caponiers of the Ditch of the ſame Redout, and from thence fired fircely upon thoſe that were in it. The Beſiegers put two Pieces in battery to drive them thence.

The 21*ſt.* in the Evening the Count de St. Geran, Geran, Lieutenant General, and the Sieur de Joſſeaux, Brigadier of Foot, relieved the Guard of the Trenches on the right with two Batallions of Navarre: and the Marqueſs d'Uxelles, Mareſchal de Camp, relieved it on the left, with the Batallion of Vaubecourt, and that of Conti, at the Head whereof is the Prince de Conti.

About ſeven a Clock, the Enemy ſprang a Mine between two Lodgments, which the Beſigers had upon the Reverſe of Paſſendal: but it neither kill'd nor hurt any body.

At nine the Miner was put to the middle of the Countergard, which covers the Baſtion. The Beſieged, an hour after, ſprang a ſecond Mine on the ſame ſide. There were three Soldiers kill'd, and ſix or ſeven wounded. Some time before we had diſcovered a Mine in the Redout on the right hand, and taken out the Powder. During the Night, we brought a Battery of ſeven Pieces within thirty paces of the Counterſcarp: and perfected the Platform and Place of Arms, which joins the two Redouts.

The 22*d*. at break of Day, the Canon of the great Battery of Paſſendal, fired by Miſfortune at the Countergard, and there were two

two Miners kill'd, and three others wounded, with a Lieutenant of the Regiment of Conti, and three Soldiers. Four Soldiers of the Regiment of Conti, animated by the Preſence and Liberalities of the Prince, who executes all the Functions of a Colonel, continued to work in the Mine, whence many had been repulſed by the Enemies fierce Firing.

The Miners found at Nine in the Morning a Gallery in the Wall of the Countergard, pierced with Battlements, which flanked the Reverſe, and ſeized thereon. They found another underneath, which cut the Countergard acroſs, and which gave us room to put ten Miners into this laſt, to make therein as many Branches, to the end to caſt a part of the Earth into the Ditch.

The Enemy, having percieved the Work of our Miners, caſt ineffectually great ſtore of Fireworks, and Barrels full of Powder, to drive them away, and to oblige the Beſiegers to quit the Lodgment. The ſame Morning the Prince de Conti, cauſed to be attach'd by a Captain, who commanded ſixty Men of his Regiment, a Traverſe, which the Beſieged poſſeſs'd in the Fauxbourg of Paſſendal, fifty paces from their Gate, for to goe ſecurely to ſetch Water at the River. The Enemies were driven from this Traverſe, although they reſiſted very ſtoutly: and we ſeized of an Out-Gate of the Town, fortified with good Towers.

About Eleven in the Morning, we knew, that the Enemies had made many Traverſes within their Counterſcarp, and the Beſiegers, doeing their utmoſt to hinder their finiſhing this Work, made themſelves Maſters of the firſt Redan on the right, and that on the left.

The Beſieged endeavoured to drive them thence with a ſhower of Granadoes and Stones: but it was without any Succeſs, and they were alſo in fine repulſed by the great Firing and Extraordinary Vigour of the Beſiegers.

During the Guard, about twenty Soldiers were ſlain, and there were four Officers, one Ingenier, and forty or fifty Soldiers wounded. at the Attack of Grondt, during the Night of the 21*ſt.* to the 22*d.* and all this Day, the Beſiegers laboured to get ground on the right, leaving the Ravelin on the left, and they brought Canon to ruine the Communication of the Gate with the Caſtle, which they batter inceſſantly.

The Mareſchal de Crequi continues to viſit and and preſs the Works, and to give all the Orders, neceſſary for advancing the Siege, with all the Vigilance and good Conduct imaginable.

There arrive daily at the Camp many Noblemen ſtrangers, whom Curioſity, excited by the report, which is ſpread about of the Beauty of this Sieges Works, and of the good Order of the Attacks, brings thither from all the neighbouring Countries.

The Enemies have done their utmoſt to endeavour the putting ſome Succour into the Place.

The Count de Valſaſſine and the Duke de Bejar undertook to get in at the Head of four Hundred reformed Officers and three Hundred Dragoons: and they came within three Leagues of the Place. But having learnt from the Guides of the Countrey, the Diſpoſition of our Works, and that it would be impoſſible to execute their Deſign, they retreated, and took their way to Bruxelles.

The Works, which have all been conducted by the Sieur de Vauban with ſuch Succeſs, that they have hindred the Enemy from making any Sally, are in very good Condition. They would have been farther advanced, had not the Mareschal de Crequi according to the King's Orders, ordered the Attacks with all the Precautions, necessary to spare the Troops, and moderate the Ardour of our Gentry.

May the 22*d*. in the Evening, the Marquess de Lambert, Lieutenant General, and the Sieur de Refuge, Brigadier of Foot, relieved the Posts on the right hand of the Trenches with two Batallions of Piedmont. The Sieur de Langallerie, Mareschal de Camp, relieved the Posts on the left with one Batallion of Auvergne, and two Batallions of the Royal.

During the Night and the following Day, our Men wrought on the right hand upon a Battery of three Pieces of Canon against the Palizadoes of the Counterscarp, for to batter the Face of the Bastion of that side, and that of the Half-Moon, which is on the left; and for to dismount a Piece of Canon, the Enemies had put there a little while since. We began also a Battery of Mortar-pieces behind the first Battery, for to hinder the Firing which the Besieged made from the Bastion and Half-Moon.

The two Lodgments of the Besiegers were lengthned: and there were finished two or three and twenty Mines in the Countergard, to be made uſe of, when we ſhould have ſeen the effect of three others, which had been made at the point of this Countergard. The Enemies caſt, during the Night, a great Quantity of Granadoes and Fireworks upon the Workmen; and into the firſt Poſts, for to retard the Works. But in the Day, the Beſiegers fired ſo fiercely, that it hindred them from appearing to ſhoot: and the Work went on without any oppoſition. There was made at the Attack of old Munſter a Battery of Mortar-pieces, for to endeavour to drive the Enemies out of the third part, which was left them of the Caſtle, and to make a Lodgment there without much loſs. At the Attack of Grondt, the Houſes whereof the Beſieged had this Night burnt, the Works went ſtill on: leaving on the left the Ravelin, which they poſſeſt, and puſhing towards the Gate of the Caſtle of Munſter, which was in the mean time continually battered by our Canon. The Marqueſs de Montpeſat was kill'd at this guard, this Day in the Morning. We loſt there an Ingenier with ten or twelve Soldiers: and there were two Captains of Foot and three inferior Officers wounded, with fifty Soldiers.

The

The ſame 23*d.* in the Evening the Count du Pleſſis, Lieutenant General, and the Sieur de Morton, Brigadier of Foot, relieved the Poſts of the Trenches on the right with a Batallion of Normandy, and that of Soiſſons. The Sieur d'Erlac, Mareſchal de Camp, relieved the Poſts on the left with the Batallions of Lyonnois and Turenne. In the Night we extended and perfected the two Lodgments on the Counterſcarp: and we wrought to make the Communication of the one with the other. The Beſieged ſprang a Mine under the Lodgment on the left: but no body was hurt by it, becauſe our men were retired to free themſelves from a very great Number of Granadoes and Fireworks, which the Enemies caſt there during the ſpace of two Hours. We reſetled our ſelves there afterwards, much better than we were before. At ſix in the Morning, the Enemies pretended they would make a Sally: but they durſt not advance, having ſeen our Granadiers march towards them with great reſolution. An hour after, the Battery of three Pieces of Canon began to play: and at the ſame time we caſt ſtore of Bombs from the Battery of Mortar-pieces, which was behind it. The fifth of theſe Bombs fell upon two or three thouſand Granadoes, which were in their Half-Moon, and ſet them on fire. The Fire was very great for above an Hour: and we ſaw in the Air abundance of Hats and Pieces of Clothes: which made us judge, that many of the Enemies were kill'd and wounded.

The 24*th.* our Men charged the Mines of the Countergard: and we battered with two Pieces of Canon the Caponieres, which are in the Ditch, that runs along the right ſide of this Work. The great Battery of Paſſendal continued to batter a Breach in the Face of the Caſtle, which looks toward this Fauxbourg: and we continued alſo to caſt therein ſtore of Bombs with good Succeſs. The Beſieged poſſeſs'd no more of the Counterſcarp, but the Redan, which covers the Half-Moon, and the two Parties were ſo near one another, that the Enemies with Hooks pluckt away our Gabions and Fagots, and drew them into their Ditches. Theſe great Progreſſes began to ſhake the Beſieged. Two Run-aways, come from the Place to the Camp, affirmed, that the Colonels and a part of the Officers of the Garriſon ſpake of capitulating to preſerve their Soldiers: the Beſieged having then loſt above ſix hundred Men, kill'd or wounded by our Bombs, or by ſhot from the Trenches. Theſe Fugitives added, that the Inhabitants, and the Women inceſſantly beſought the Prince de Chimay to prevent by a Capitulation the Miſeries whereunto they ſhould be expoſed, if they expected the laſt Extremities. The Beſiegers loſt at this guard the Sieur de Valorge, Captain of the Granadiers of Lyonnois, with eleven Soldiers. An Ingenier, two inferior Officers, and about forty Soldiers were wounded. My Lord Howard, Son to the Earl of Carlile, who was a Volunteer, was mortally wounded, as he was giving Marks of a great Courage.

The 24*th*. in the Evening, the Marqueſs de Genlis and the Marqueſs de Neſle mounted on the right hand of the Trenches with two Batallions of the Marine: and the Count de Broglio mounted on the left with two Batallions of the Queens. In the Night the Enemies fired very fiercely to drive the Beſiegers from their Lodgments, who yet failed not to keep themſelves there. They made alſo an Attempt againſt the Miners of the Countergard: and were repelled with the loſs of ſome Soldiers. The Beſiegers abandoned the Attack of Grondt, after they had drawn thence their Canon. At the Attack of the Caſtle of Old Munſter, we brought two Pieces of Canon, wherewith we made a Breach of twelves paces in the Gate, which the Beſieged held: and we made two Batteries of Mortar-pieces, which continually caſt Bombs there. There was at this Guard five or ſix Soldiers kill'd, and about twenty wounded.

In the Evening of the 25*th.* the Sieur de Joyeuſe mounted on the right with Bourbonnois and Humieres: and the Marqueſs de Renty on the left with the Crown and Vermandois. The Beſieged at the beginning of the Night caſt ſo great a quantity of Fireworks, that the Beſiegers had no ſmall difficulty to preſerve the Powder they carried to charge the Mines. They had already burnt two of our Soldiers, who carried ſome in Bags. The Beſiegers began three covered Ways upon the Reverſe of Paſſendal between the Place, and the three Redouts, for to goe to the Breach of the Countergard, when it ſhould be made. They continued to batter a Breach in the Point of the Half-Moon: to ruine the Caponieres of the Ditch of the Countergard: and to extend the Mine-work to the right and left of the Redan of the Counterſcarp, which the Beſieged were in fine obliged to quit. There was at this guard a Captain of Foot, and ten or twelve Soldiers ſlain, and about twenty Soldiers wounded.

The 26th. in the Evening, the Count de St. Geran, and the Duke de la Ferte relieved the Poſts of the Trenches on the right with two Batallions of Champagne and the Chevalier de Tilladet relieved the Poſts on the left with the Batallions of la Ferte, Conde and Orleans. The Batallion of Enguien went on the ſide of the Caſtle. During the Night, the Beſiegers finiſht the three Ways begun on the Reverſe of Paſſendal. They carried on the Mine-work, as far as the Bottom of the Ditch of the Countergard: and they wrought at the Deſcent of the Ditch of the Half-Moon, in the point whereof there was already a Breach for two Men to get up a breaſt. There was not however any appearance of hazarding to get up by this Breach, though it had been even greater, becauſe we were aſſured that there were Mines there: and becauſe it was but in the firſt Envelop of the Half-Moon, which was double. The Beſieged ſprang two Mines in the laſt Redan of the Counterſcarp. The firſt had not any effect: and the other kill'd three Soldiers, and wounded nine or ten.

The 27*th.* in the Morning, we finiſht the charging of the Mine: and we made the Powder be carried by Soldiers diſguiſed like Laborers. We made them be thus diſguiſed, becauſe we had for ſome time obſerved that the Beſieged ſhot not much at the Laborers, believing that they were Countrymen thereabouts, whom the Beſiegers conſtrained to work. We employed our ſelves diligently in cloſing the Mine, and diſpoſed all things with great care for ſpringing it the morrow Morning, and for mounting afterwards to the Breach. There were ten Soldiers kill'd, and about twenty wounded.

The 27*th.* in the Evening the Marqueſs de Lambert and the Sieur de Rubantel relieved the Poſts of the Trenches on the right with two Batallions of Navarre: and the Sieur de Joſſeaux relieved the Poſts on the left, with the Batallions of Vaubecourt, of Conti, and Auvergne. During the Night, according to the Orders of the Mareſchal de Crequi, we made all the Preparatives neceſſary for the Attack, which was to be made the morrow Morning upon the Countergard: and things were diſpoſed with ſo much Prudence, that never any Action was begun and continued with better Order, leſs Confuſion, more Conſtancy, and greater Succeſs. At break of Day, the Marqueſs de la Freſeliere put the Batteries in ſo good Eſtate, that the Canon of the Beſiegers played inceſſantly for two Hours. The Sieur de Vigny cauſed alſo the Batteries of the Mortar-pieces to be ordered with ſo much care, that the Bombs, which fell with diſcontinuation into the Baſtions, tormented the Beſieged. At the ſame time, the Troops, which were to be employed upon this Attack, marched to the Rendezvous, aſſigned them by the Mareſchal de Crequi: who, notwithſtanding his Indiſpoſition, and an Inciſion, which had been made in his Leg the Day before, cauſed himſelf to be carried to the Head of the Trenches, that he might there be nearer at hand to give his Orders, and might put more Life into what was to be executed. The Granadiers of Vaubecourt were deſtined to attack the right Side of the Countergard of the Baſtion of Barlemont, after the Mine ſhould have had its effect: being ſeconded by the two Companies of Granadiers of Piemont, and by an hundred Men of the Regiment of Vaubecourt, which had had at their Head the Company of Granadiers of the Regiment of Auvergne. The Granadiers of Conti were commanded to attack a Redan, ruined by our Canon, on the left ſide of the Countergard being backt by two Companies of Granadiers of Normandy, one of the Royal, and an hundred Men of the Regiment of Conti. The two Companies of the Granadiers of Navarre were appointed their Poſt on the left hand of the Attack of Conti, over againſt the Buttreſs of the Baſtion of Barlemont: being ſeconded by the Companies of Granadiers of the Marine, of Bourbonnois, and of Rouergue, with an hundred Men of that Regiment. Each Regiment in a Body was to ſupport its Attack, except that of the Granadiers of Navarre, which was maintained by the Batallion of Rouergue.

The Laborers were ranged in three Troops, with the Ingeniers, to be ready to march when the detached Troops ſhould have ſeized on the Breaches: and it was in fine reſolved, that aſſoon as the ſecond Mine was ſprung, they ſhould march by the Ways, which were ſhewn them. All things being thus diſpoſed, about four in the Morning all the Troops that were at the foremoſt Poſts, were cauſed to withdraw from the Trenches, to the end they might be out of the Fall of the Ruines, which the Mine might make. The Miners were alſo made go out of their Hole: and there were left onely the Pikes planted with the Colors, and ſome Soldiers, to hinder the Enemy from knowing the deſign of the Beſiegers.

The 28*th.* about ſeven in the Morning, the Mine was ſprung: and its Effect was very conſiderable. Nevertheleſs the Aſcent of the Countergard, and the other Works, was ſo rough and difficult, that the detached Men, who attacht at the ſame time, that the Enemies might not have leiſure to retrench themſelves, were obliged to ſcramble, and thruſt one another, to get to the Top of the Breach.

The Troops being advanced to ſeize on the Breaches, and make Lodgments there, according as it had been propoſed, thoſe, which marched firſt, extended themſelves under the Baſtion on the left, where were thrown at them a great Number of Granadoes. The others which followed them, extended themſelves along the Curtain, and the Baſtion on the right at the Foot of the Breach: after which which they aſcended together with much order to the Top of the Breach, to ſettle themſelves there. But thoſe, who advanced to the end of the Curtain, which joins the Baſtion on the left, met with a vigorous oppoſition.

At the ſame time the Enemy ſprang two Mines in this place, which obliged the Commanded Men to retire to preſerve themſelves: but having preſently recovered the right hand of theſe Mines with the other Troops, they chaſed thence the Beſieged, and began on all ſides to ſettle the Lodgments by means of abundance of Fagots, which were inceſſantly brought thither. The Troops, which were in the Baſtion on the left, to reſettle themſelves there, were diſquieted by the Granadoes, which the Beſieged caſt alſo from the ſide of the Ditch. But we cauſed them to be driven by ſome Officers and Soldiers as far as the Wall, which is on the left, that goes down from the Place to the Ditch, and flanks the Baſtion of Barlemont, where they laboured to retrench themſelves.

The Beſieged in their Retreat ſet on fire a little Magazene fill'd with Bombs, Granadoes and Powder, whereby many of the Beſiegers were kill'd or wounded. Four Companies of Spaniſh Foot defended the Countergard, and the other Works, which are joined thereunto, were defended by Detachments. They made ſo obſtinate a Defence, that our Troops, though uſing their utmoſt endeavours, had for half an hour much difficulty to get poſſeſſion of the Top of the Breach: the place of it ſelf being very high, and the Ruines of the Mine not being ſolid enough to make it firm. But after a fierce Charge of Muskets and Granadoes, our Men ſo vigorouſly diſputed the matter with the Swords point, that the Enemy was with much loſs driven from this Poſt: and many Spaniards, who would not ask Quarter, were cut in pieces. Some, carried on with an extreme deſire of ſignalizing themſelves, went as far as the Ditch of the Place. The Lieutenant of the Granadiers of Rouergue, followed by ten or twelve, bore up with great Conſtancy againſt the Charge of forty Maſters: and the greateſt part of the Horſe was kill'd, and the reſt put to flight by help of the Firing of the Granadiers, which were in the Countergard. The Commandant was alſo kill'd by the Count de Mailly, who went to meet him, having ſeen him advance his Sword on high. Our Men would have made a Lodgment near the Ditch over againſt the right hand Front of the Baſtion; but the extraordinary Firing of the Beſieged, which kill'd us ſome men, obliged them to take the reſolution to retire along the Battlements of the Wall. The Beſieged had placed three little Pieces on the Terraces, covered with Trees, on the ſide of Grondt, having judged that they ſhould be attackt thereabouts: and the Troops, which they played upon in the flank, were very much incommoded by them: as alſo by the Ordnance, which they had on the Flank of the Baſtion oppoſite to that of Barlemont. There was not for five or ſix hours any intermiſſion of Firing. We loſt twenty or five and twenty Officers, with about three-ſcore and ten Soldiers: and there were many wounded, amongſt whom was the Chevalier de Megrigny, and the Sieur de Marny Ingenier. The Captains of the Granadiers of Bourbonnois and Conti were kill'd. The Sieur de Sainte Marthe, Captain of the Granadiers of Auvergne, and the Sieur de Caſtillon, Captain of Navarre, were wounded. The Marqueſs Bourlemont, Brother to the Duke of d'Atri, was ſlain. The Duke de Choiſeut was wounded with the ſhiver of a Bomb above the left Eye, whereof he died ſome Days after: and the Vidame de Laon, Son to the Count du Roy, was wounded with a Musket-ſhot through the Body, both of them giving Teſtimonies of a ſingular Courage.

The Prince de Conti, and the Prince de la Roche ſur-Yon expoſed themſelves to the greateſt danger with a Valour worthy their Birth, and the laſt received on the Stomach a blow with a Stone. All the Volunteers ſignalized themſelves there, particularly the Prince de Tingry, the Marqueſs de Crequi, the Count de Luz, the Count d'Eſtrees, the Marqueſs de Thiange, the Marqueſs de Nogent, and the Marqueſs de la Batie. The Duke of Grafton, and the Duke of Northumberland, his Brother, and many other Engliſh Lords, who came to the Siege in Quality of Volunteers, ſignalized themſelves on this occaſion.

The Sieur de Vauban, Mareſchal de Camp, was one of the firſt in the Countergard, and gave there with his ordinary Sufficiency Orders, very beneficial for the Security and Continuation of the Lodgments, which were made there.

All the Foot, which were at this Action, acquitted acquitted themſelves very well of their Devois: and many Soldiers made themſelves be taken notice of.

It was neceſſary, after the effect of the Mine, and the Lodgment built upon the Countergard, to make a Deſcent into the Ditch. The Count du Pleſſis, Lieutenant General for the Day, undertook this Care with all the Succeſs, that could be expected.

He made the Ditch be viewed. He kill'd or put to flight all the Enemies that were found before him: and afterward cauſed the Lodgments to be made, notwithſtanding all the Effects of the Beſieged, who caſt from above the Baſtions a prodigious quantity of Granadoes, Bombs and Fireworks upon the Workmen, and Soldiers. He received under the Elbow a blow with the glancing of a Granado, which made him for ſome time unable to ſtir it. He ceaſed not to continue preſent at the Work of the Lodgment, till ſuch time as it was extended from the Gate of the Gallery of the Countergard, which leads to the Ditch, as far as the Baſtion of Barlemont: which made fifteen Toiſes. Two hours after, he put the Miners to work in two places, one upon the right towards the Point of the Baſtion, and the other on the left, drawing towards the Flank, the Enemy not being able to incommode them.

The Works were continued the 30*th.* and the 31*ſt.* with much Succeſs: and we will give you the particular thereof in the following Relations.

May the 29*th.* in the Evening the Count du Pleſſis, Lieutenant General, mounted the fifth time the Trenches: and made the Deſcent of the Ditch with very good Succeſs.

The 30*th.* in the Morning, we attackt the third Diviſion of the Caſtle of Old Munſter: and made our ſelves Maſters of it after ſome reſiſtance of the Enemies. They ſoon quitted this Work to retire upon the Rampart, hoping by their fierce Firing to hinder our Men from lodging there. About two in the Afternoon, a Company of the Granadiers of Rouergue, one of Languedoc, and two of Fuzeliers, ſupported by a Batallion of that Regiment, wholly carried this Caſtle. The Beſieged had raiſed behind the Diviſion a Battery of three Pieces. We could not goe to them above ſeven or eight a breaſt: and we were expoſed to the ſhot of the Place. Nevertheleſs they abandoned this Poſt near half an hour before the Beſiegers came againſt it, and left there their Canon all charged. Our Men made afterwards many winding Traverſes to lodge themſelves ſafely upon the Brink of the Ditch: where they extended themſelves, as much as the Ground-work could permit. An Ingenier, and fourteen or fifteen Soldiers were kill'd upon this occaſion, and there were about forty wounded. About five in the Evening the Enemies quitted the Half-Moon of the Countergard, which they ſtill held at the great Attack. The General Officers of the Guard, having been advertiſed thereof, thought fit, before they ſeiſed this Work, to ſend ſome Men by the Breach, which was at the Point of the Countergard, to ſee whether there were no Mines, and to open thoſe they ſhould find there. There were happily diſcovered under the Countergard the Trains of thirteen or fourteen Toiſes of Mines, which were all charged. We took thence the Powder, and we detached Workmen to make a Lodgment, which exteriorly embraced all the Parapets. We delayed to put People into the Half-Moon till we had had time to ſearch the Mines, which was done the following Night. We found found there two Pieces of Canon, which the Enemies had left, and we judged thereby that Fear had made them retire from this Half-Moon. The Sieur Pariſot, Major of Cambray, Ingenier, was wounded with a Piece of a Granado on the Stomach, as he was ſetting the Miner to the Baſtion of the Place.

The 30*th.* in the Evening, The Sieur de Toyeuſe, Lieutenant General, the Sieur d'Erloc, and the Marqueſs de Neſle relieved the Trenches with two Batallions of the Marine, and two of the Queens. We finiſht, during the Night a Battery of two Pieces of Canon, which had been begun upon the Countergard on the left: and we carried on by the Mine-work about twenty Toiſes of a Trench, drawing from the Countergard to the Curtain, which is on the Reverſe of Paſſendal.

The 31*ſt.* we continued to work to make the Deſcent of the Ditch: and to erect a Battery of three Pieces of Canon on the ſame Ditch, which were to play with another Battery of ſeven Pieces, which had begun in the Morning to fire briskly againſt a Baſtion, which remained before the Beſiegers, to hinder them from entring the Place. We wrought alſo upon all that was neceſſary for the ſpringing ſeveral Mines, to the end to give afterwards the Aſſault, in caſe the Enemies ſhewed no Deſign to yield.

But the Prince de Chimay, knowing that the Town was no longer defenſible, and ſeeing himſelf preſſed by the Principal Officers of the Garriſon and by the Townſmen, to prevent the Misfortunes, which befall a Place, taken by aſſault, cauſed June the 1*ſt.* a Parley to be beaten, and demanded to capitulate. Hoſtages were ſoon ſent on both ſides, and all Acts of Hoſtility ceaſed. The Prince de Chimay deſired a Truce for ſome Days, that he might ſend to Bruxelles, to repreſent to the Marqueſs de Grana the Extremity wherein he was. He added thereunto ſome other Requeſts, but the Mareſchal de Crequi thought not fit to grant him any of them. The Truce was thus broken, and the ſame Evening the Beſieged and the Beſiegers began to fire upon one another.

The 2*d.* we perceived a white Cloth, whereby the Townſmen would declare, that they would no longer defend themſelves, nor ſhoot any more. But the Garriſon ceaſed not to fire at us with their Muskets all the Night, and our Men fired alſo briskly both their Musket and Canon to anſwer them.

The

The 3*d.* the Firing of the Beſieged diminiſhed by degrees till ten a Clock, when they entirely left off to ſhoot and appear. They were above half an hour in this Condition: and in fine, ſeeing that the Beſiegers erected in the Ditch a Battery of four great Pieces, they made appear at the Attack, where the Prince of Conti was, ſome Men who made a ſhew of deſiring to ſpeak. We could ſcarce make them leave firing on our ſide, that we might hear them. They ſaid, that the Beſieged had beaten a Parley on the ſide of the Caſtle: and deſired, that we would not level our Canon. They were anſwered, that the Beſieged ſhould beat the Parley on the ſide, where they cauſed their Battery to be erected, and that they ſhould ceaſe working. They ſaid, they expected a Drum: in the mean time the Work was diſcontinued, and in fine the Drum arrived. He cried out, after he had beaten, that they had made this call to capitulate. Some time after the Hoſtages were brought to the Guard of the Trenches, where the Prince de Conti was; and he ſent them to the Mareſchal de Crequi, who ſent alſo his into the Town. The Deputies arrived afterward at the Camp with the Articles of Capitulation, lation, which the Prince de Chimay demanded. There was one in favour of the Deſerters of our Troops, for whom the Beſieged demanded an Amneſty; and another to obtain four Pieces of Canon, which were not granted.

After many difficulties the Capitulation was in fine regulated and Signed: the Extract whereof follows.

The Articles of Capitulation of the Town of Luxemburg.

I. The Prince de Chimay Governour, the Intendant, the Commiſſaries of the Armies and Proviſions, the Officers of the Ordnance and of the Troops, and all the Garriſon, their Families, Domeſticks, and Servants, ſhall go forth of the Town in full liberty, with their moveables and effects, and without having their Baggage viſited, they ſhall be conducted by the Paſſage of the Moule to Stoken or the places thereabouts: and they ſhall not in any ſort be moleſted by our Troops for the ſpace of four days: during which they may take the way of Louvain or of Malines without being any way oppoſed.

II. The Foot ſhall go out by the Breach of the Caſtle, taking their way by the Gate of Paffendal: and the Horſe, Artillery, and Baggage by the ſame Gate, or ſuch other as the Governour ſhall think fit, with Arms and Baggage, Drums beating, Trumpets ſounding, Colors flying, Match lighted at both ends, Ball in mouth, with 2 Pieces of Ordnance of Braſs, to wit, 2 Demi-Canons, beſides which the Mareſchal de Crequi gave them two others, which make in all four Canons, and one Mortar-piece, in reſpect to the Prince de Chimay, with their Carriages, Furniture and Ammunition, neceſſary for ſix Charges for each piece:

and to this purpoſe the Beſiegers ſhall furniſh them with Carts, Horſes, Harneſs, and other things neceſſary for their carryage and remove.

III. There are granted three hundred Carts, and more, if need be, for the carryage of the Baggage, Males, and effects, which can be removed.

IV. The Garriſion ſhall not march above two Leagues the day of their going forth, and three the day following. The Commiſſaries, which ſhall be at the conduct, provide for their ſubſiſtence; and they may at parting take Bread and Meat for five days.

V. Concerning Deſerters.

VI. The Priſoners ſhall be rendred on both ſides without ranſom: but thoſe, which have been rendred before this Capitulation, ſhall not be freed from paying their Ranſoms.

VII. There ſhall be care taken of the Sick and Wounded, which cannot be removed.

VIII. The Spoils, already taken, ſhall be enjoyed by thoſe that have them.

IX. The Wives aud Widows of the Officers and Souldiers, ſhall have liberty, if they will, to remain in the Town.

X. The Inhabitants ſhall enjoy all their Franchiſes, as they were before the Siege.

XI. There ſhall be granted ſix Months to the Officers and Souldiers for to diſpoſe of their Eſtates.

XII. The military Officers ſhall not be arreſted for Debt on the day of their going forth; but they ſhall give ſureties and promiſſes to pay.

XIII. The Receiver and Commiſſaries of the Proviſions ſhall not be ſearched.

XIV. The Officers and Souldiers of the Beſiegers ſhall approach no nearer the place than their Works, till the day of the Garriſons going forth.

Articles

Articles concerning the States of the Town.

XV. There ſhall remain no other Inhabitants, but thoſe, that ſhall make profeſſion of the Catholick, Apoſtolick, and Roman Religion.

XVI. Concerns the Pretenſions of the Prelates, Nobles, and Deputies of the Towns, repreſenting the three Eſtates.

XVII. The Officers of the Council, and others ſhall continue in their Offices.

XVIII, XIX, XX, XXI, XXIII, XXIV, XXV, and XXVI. Articles, which concern the particular Privileges of the Countrey and Territories, depending on the Dutchy of Luxemburg.

XXII. There ſhall be an Agreement made with the Marqueſs de la Freſiliere for the Bells and Metals, which belong to the Artillery.

XXVII. The Officers and Souldiers, which continue in the Service of his Majeſties Enemies, ſhall be Subject to the Pains, appointed by the Ordinances.

XXVIII. Orders the enregiſtring of the Capitulation.

XXIX. The Gariſon ſhall be obliged to goe forth of the Place on Wedneſday the 7th of this preſent Month of June, at fartheſt by noon: and ſhall at eight in the morning put into the hands of the Beſiegers a Gate, which ſhall be taken into poſſeſſion by an hundred men of the ancienteſt Regiments, near which the Beſieged may for their ſecurity put a Guard: that for the ſecurity of the Articles ſhall be given three Hoſtages of equal condition, and the Articles ſigned double by the Mareſchal de Crequi and the Prince de Chimay: and that the Inventaries of Pieces of Ordnance, Proviſions for War, and Victuals, which are in the Town, ſhall be faithfully delivered up.

According to this Capitulation, the Garriſon went out of the Town the 7th. of this Month in the Morning, to the Number of about twelve Thouſand men: the Prince de Chimay marching at their Head.
